EXPECTED FUNDS ARE NOT FORTHCOMING

Drexels Do Not Give Lord Maida-stone Money to Restore Ancestral Hall.

BY LA MARQUE DE PONTENAY.

NEITHER Anthony Drexel nor his wife has seen fit to fulfill the expectations formed at the time of the marriage of their only daughter to Lord Maida-stone, that they would furnish the money needed to repair Kirby Hall, the wonderful ancestral country place in Northamptonshire of Lord Maida-stone's father, the Earl of Winchester and Nottingham.

It was understood that Lord Winchester had made over the entire Kirby Hall property to his son, and that Lord Maida-stone, with the assistance of his wife's parents, would at once proceed to restore the place.

The Drexels having paid several visits to Northamptonshire for the purpose of making a careful inspection of the property, the money, however, has not been forthcoming.

Lady Maida-stone, who has been in the country for some time, has been forced to content herself with an allowance from them, and as the lump sum needed for Kirby Hall was not forthcoming, Lord Maida-stone resented it to his father, who has offered it for public sale this month.

It is a magnificent old place, dating from the Tudors, subsequent additions having been made by Inigo Jones in the reign of Charles I. It originally belonged to the Earls of Stafford, and was purchased during the reign of Queen Elizabeth by Christopher Hatton, of Holdenby, who is described in the deed of sale as captain of the Queen's Majesty's Guard.

He died as her Lord Chancellor, and Kirby Hall eventually passed to the Earls of Northampton. Considerable damage having been done by fire to the mansion, the impoverishment of the Earls of Winchester prevented its restoration, or even its maintenance. The roofs were allowed to fall in, the windows robbed not only their glass, but even of their casing, the doors removed from their hinges, while ivy, so picturesque, and yet so promotive of disintegration of buildings, was allowed to have unchecked growth.

In short, the place was allowed to go to rack and ruin. The present Lord Winchester, while he has no money to restore the place as a whole, has at least rendered a portion of the roofs watertight, boarded up some of the windows, and taken steps to preserve the walls. But it would cost far more than he can afford to restore the entire place, which, when renovated by people of taste and refinement, with reverence for the past, would be one of the grandest and most stately of the old country seats for which England is so famous.

Lord Moncreiff, who has just succeeded to the peerage through the death of his parson father, will be the only schoolmaster in the House of Lords now that the late Earl of Stamford has been gathered to his fathers, and that the reverend Marquis of Normandy has given up the boys' school which he maintained at Mulgrave Castle, near Northampton.

Reverend Marquis of Normandy, a cricketer, being the star player of the Stirling County Cricket Club.

He is now the head of the entire house and clan of Moncreiff, and has a number of representatives in the country, and which is one of the oldest families of Scotland, tracing its line back to the time when sundering first began to use in North Britain. It is said to have been founded by Ramorus de Moncreiff, keeper of the wardrobe to Alexander I., at the beginning of the twelfth century, and the lands of Moncreiff, in Perthshire, were granted by King Alexander of Scotland to Sir Matthew Moncreiff, by a charter bearing the date of 1248, still in existence.

Moncreiff, having in the thirteenth century possession of the Moncreiff family ever since, that is to say, for more than 600 years.

Moncreiff, who died in 1530, had two sons, William, the elder, from whom Lord Moncreiff is descended, and John, the younger, from whom is traced Sir Robert, the founder of the branch now represented by Sir Robert Moncreiff.

William's grandson, John, received a baronetcy from James I. in 1626, with remainder to his heirs male whatsoever. His son and namesake, James, who died in 1630, became involved in financial difficulties, and was forced thereby to sell the ancestral Moncreiff estates to his distant cousin, Thomas Moncreiff, head of the younger branch, who built the present mansion, known as the House of Moncreiff, and who received a baronetcy in 1655 from James II.

That is why the old Moncreiff estates are in the possession of Sir Robert Moncreiff, instead of Lord Moncreiff, the head of the family.

James Moncreiff, the senior line, achieved great eminence on the Scottish bench, and became Lord Justice Clerk of Scotland, receiving prior to the death of his elder brother a baronetcy of his own in 1871, and three years later a peerage as Lord Moncreiff. His grandson, the present Lord Moncreiff, has, therefore, in addition to his barony, two baronetcies, one bestowed by James I. and the other by Queen Victoria.

He has a couple of places in Scotland, namely, Tulloch Castle, in Kinross-shire, and Cantillon House, in North Berwick, both of which, however, have been let for some time past.

For his father, the late peer, was rector of Tanworth, in the suburbs of Birmingham, and made his home at the rectory. Lord Moncreiff himself, who is married, but has no children, resides at the school of which he is head master. The peer, however, has no sons; his father's younger brother, the Hon. James Moncreiff, who lives at Edinburgh, and has a number of sons.

The best known of the Moncreiffs in this country are William and Malcolm Moncreiff, brothers of Sir Robert Moncreiff, of Moncreiff, and who, for many years, have made their home at their ancestral seat, the House of Moncreiff, Wyo., Malcolm being married to a very charming Kentucky girl, a daughter of the late Samuel Walker, of Frankfort, Ky. Ronald Moncreiff, another brother, who spent much time in the United States, died four years ago.

The members of this branch of the Moncreiffs are renowned for their good looks, especially the women, and the seven sisters of William and Malcolm Moncreiff were some of the most famous beauties of the day, especially Georgina, Dowager Countess of Dudley, the late Duchess of Atholl, the late Lady Graham-Montgomery, and Helen, Lady Forbes, of Newe.

People here who have been taught to believe that the German diplomatic services are models to the rest of the world in organization and efficiency should glance over the late peer, who has just been published in Berlin by one of the leading German economists, on the subject of the empire's representation in China. Speaking from the author's experience of the Orient, the author complains bitterly that the post of envoy at Peking is always treated at Berlin in the light of a third-class mission, to which men are appointed merely by virtue of seniority, and without the slightest regard to their experience and capacities. In fact, since the departure of Baron Brandt, some twenty years ago, who possessed an altogether remarkable knowledge of everything relating to China, and who was removed for having married an American girl, in violation of the German Foreign Office rules, the men who have succeeded one another as ministers plenipotentiary at Peking have been elderly men, who knew nothing about the country on their arrival, and who were too old and too set in their ways to learn. The pamphlet complains that they have not even been acquainted with the economic conditions of Germany.

It is asserted that when the revolution in China broke out, which brought about the overthrow of the empire and the proclamation of a republic, Von Haxthausen, the present envoy, had been in China for less than six months, while the first and second secretaries of the legation, and the chief interpreter, were all three absent on leave, the work of the mission in this troublous time being left in the hands of two junior interpreters.

Moreover, the German consul-general at Tientsin was away on leave, and so, too, were the regular German consular representatives in several other important cities, their places being temporarily filled by inexperienced subordinates.

Most egregious mistakes have been constantly taking place, owing to the diplomatic authorities being compelled by inexperience to base their decisions in new issues on precedents recorded in the archives, instead of dealing with them in accordance with the altered condition of affairs and new requirements created thereby. German trade and German influence are, thanks to this, stated to be at a lower ebb in China than ever before.

NEGRO IS IDENTIFIED.

Officers Have Man Who Shot Town Sergeant Watkins.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]

Alexandria, Va., June 9.—James J. Ayis, colored, who was arrested several days ago on a charge of stealing a horse, and who is now in the hands of the police, is identified as the man who shot Town Sergeant Watkins, of Alexandria, on the morning of Feb. 1, 1912, and for whom there is a reward of $200. The identification of the prisoner was made this afternoon by R. B. Rawlings and J. M. Michie, of Gordonsville, who came here for that purpose.

Ayis, it is stated, has many aliases and bears a long criminal record. His description in a circular gotten out by the Gordonsville authorities tallied with the prisoner in every respect.

The shooting of Sergeant Watkins followed after he had taken Ayis in custody for the robbery of the stores of J. W. and S. Cornett, of Lindsey, and also the store and post-office conducted by A. J. Bell at Cobham.

Reizing, he was in for a long term in prison. Ayis whipped out a revolver and fired several shots point blank at the town sergeant and made his escape. As a result, Sergeant Watkins received a bullet in his right leg and was laid up for repairs for some time.

FRIENDS NOT ENCOURAGING

After 20 Years Illness, Friends of Mrs. Bowen Thought She Could Not Recover

Arritts, Va.—"For 20 years I suffered with womanly trouble," says Mrs. D. J. Bowen, of this place, "and although I tried different treatments, I did not get any relief.

I was unable to look after any of my work, and my friends thought I could not get well.

Finally, I began to take Cardui, the woman's tonic, and I hadn't taken one-third of the first bottle before I could notice its good effects.

Now I can do all my work, feel like I'm not more than 16 years old, but am really 49. My friends say I look so well they hardly know me when they meet me in the road.

My daughter is using Cardui now, and she says it is a fine medicine. I also have a number of lady friends who are taking it, since they found out how it helped me.

Whenever I feel a little fatigued after a day's work I just take a dose of Cardui, and am all right.

I can't say too much for Cardui."

No matter how long-standing the trouble, Cardui is almost sure to help you. It is a tonic remedy. It is prepared for women to bring relief from womanly ailments.

You can rely on Cardui. It will do for you what it has done for thousands of others. It will help you.

Begin to take Cardui to-day.

FINAL EXERCISES AT NORMAL SCHOOL

Dr. J. A. C. Chandler Declines Re-Election as President of Board.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]

Fredericksburg, Va., June 9.—The baccalaureate sermon before the faculty and student body and a large number of citizens of Fredericksburg was preached last night in the auditorium of Russell Hall, on the Fredericksburg State Normal School grounds, by Rev. J. J. Bates, D.D., pastor of All Saints' Church, Richmond. The theme of the discourse was "Character," and the sermon was a strong and eloquent one. There are thirty-two graduates of this year of the school. The program for class night included: salutatory, by Miss Pauline Perry; class poem, Miss Elsie Coleman; class history, Miss Ruth Lord; prophecy, Miss Helen Daniel; valedictory, Miss Alice Chilton.

To-night the literary address to the
